The Ultimate Proof: Google's Forum AI Just Doxxed Me While Summarizing My Post About AI Profiling

If anyone ever needed absolute, undeniable proof that Google's AI is an uncontrollable, privacy-violating data extraction engine, look no further than the "Topic summary" generated by the AI on my own post.

The absolute irony of this situation is sickening.

Here is exactly what just happened:
I wrote a detailed post explaining how Google's AI Overview unlawfully reconstructs my identity, linking my deleted accounts, aliases, and real name. To prove my case, I included the text of a formal Legal Notice, signed with my real name at the very bottom.

What did the "helpful" Forum AI do?
Instead of summarizing the core issue—that a user is reporting a severe privacy violation—the AI specifically hunted down my real name from the signature, extracted it, and hardcoded it to e public, plain-text summary at the top of the page for the entire internet to see and index.

Google, your own AI just proved my entire case for me.

Context-Blind Extraction: The AI doesn't understand that I am complaining about privacy. It just sees personal data, extracts it, and publishes it.

Structural Profiling: It took a signature from the bottom of a legal notice and actively merged it with my online username ("Bitu79") in a public text field, doing exactly the kind of identity-reconstruction I am accusing you of.

Identity Linkage as a Priority: You claim your AI doesn't profile and is just a "helpful assistant." Yet, your AI prioritizes extracting and linking Personally Identifiable Information (PII) over actual content summarization.

This isn't a bug. This is a deeply flawed, automated surveillance architecture that cannot be turned off. Thank you for providing the perfect, timestamped evidence for my legal case. The system is doing exactly what I said it does.
